ditional article to the Treaty of Washington was governed by a strong desire, in which the governed by a strong desire, resident shared, to remove the differences which threatened the prosecution of the arbiwas designed to settle, in an amicable manner. all causes of differences between the United States and Great Britain. It is known from official and private advices that Great Britain was determined to withdraw from the arbitration should the United States persist in the presentation of claims for indirect damages, and it is further known that the United States was, for some time, under these circumstances, disposed to throw the responsi-bility of the threatened failure of the treaty upon Great Britain, our Government insisting that it had a right to present these claims with the others before the Tribunat, in order that the principle involved might be settled, though not expecting to receive a monied consideration, and Great Britain, with its view of the case, was disposed to throw the responsibility of a failure to arbitration upon the United States. The vote taken last night in the Senate is remajority of the Senate against the claims for indirect damages in view of a like admission or he part of Great Britain against the United cumstances similar to those in which the objectionable class of claims originated. The Presi by the Senate, with a view of putting in treaty form a declaration against indirect damages, which the United States have now abandoned, and which Great Britain asserts she neve claimed for herself as against other powers. During the consideration of the subject, in two-thirds vote, owing to the contrariety of views presented. Not less than six amendments were offered to effect the desired end. Conflicting reports prevail as to the vote advising and consenting to the President's negotiating a treaty on the proposed basis; but forty against nine seems to be the more reliable scatement.
